"This is the biggest step in evolution of our gameplay engine since FIFA 19," said Craig Tanner, Senior AI Producer at EA SPORTS. "We are using the AI to help the player replicate what it would be like to play in high-intensity football and to make the game more authentic." Using EA SPORTS HyperMotion Technology, Fifa 22 Crack Mac moves players faster and with greater intent, changing how players run, sprint, head and tackle. The game also allows players to sprint more efficiently and makes head movement more specific when players decide to take on a target. FIFA 22 also provides more realistic head movement and acceleration when players are sprinting, making the game feel more reactive and responsive. The overall look and feel of players, player collisions and player movement all benefit from the technology. The amount of power generated during collisions has also been enhanced. All these changes are made while maintaining collision animations that are relatively on-model, preserving the authenticity and feel of the sport. FIFA's gameplay engine is based on the NHL 3D engine used in NHL 19 and EA SPORTS NHL 20. As with those games, FIFA 22 uses traditional buttons and sticks to control the game, and makes use of EA SPORTS' cross-platform Remote Play to allow for cross-platform play between consoles and the PC. The gameplay engine was also enhanced with new AI routines which provide quicker and more reactive play from the opposition. Defenders now fully support the game physics engine, so they're better able to react to attackers. Custom game creation tools have also been enhanced to allow players to customize their match settings quickly and easily, along with playing more matches, using more tactics and a number of other ways to create immersive experiences. "FIFA is an incredibly authentic football game that our fans love," said Andrew Yip, Creative Director at EA SPORTS. "We use feedback from our fans and stakeholders to make gameplay improvements, so it's really exciting to get them on board with EA SPORTS HyperMotion Technology." Developers have captured the movement of 22 top-level footballers playing high-intensity matches in full motion capture suits. The data collected from these matches has been used to develop new physics in FIFA 22. This is the biggest step in evolution of our gameplay engine since FIFA 19, Craig Tanner, Senior AI Producer at EA SPORTS Players will feel more powerful when tackling, running, sprinting and playing other high-

On the whole, the player experience in FIFA has been extremely positive and passionate fans are quick to defend the series. Why did you add it? Well, we included FIFA in the EA SPORTS™ FIFA line up for a reason. It has been the flagship series for as long as EA SPORTS FIFA has been around, and has set the standard for the series with its unique, authentic football gameplay. With the introduction of the PES series, we have introduced a natural evolution in player experience. In FIFA, we have made fundamental changes to the gameplay. We’ve taken one of the few realistic aspects of the game and made it the core engine – putting the ball through the slightest of gaps, feeling the weight of it’s passing and a whole new sense of momentum in its movement. But we want to go further than just making changes to the core game engine. Our main goal for this year is to reinvigorate the complete game experience. We want to give fans what they’ve been asking for – and what they want to see more of – from the series. We want to add more variety to the gameplay, new players to control and a new way to play – featuring brand new ways to compete. But what does that mean for you, the fans, the game’s long-standing and loyal players? For starters, the game is better balanced and much more realistic than it has ever been. The changes begin with the core gameplay. How the ball behaves in the air and the weight it has while in the air is better understood thanks to the new Pro Player Data and physics engine. There is more realistic physics, more movement in the game. We’ve also kept the realistic pitch shape and studs on the ball to keep the action flowing like a real-life football game. The changes continue in the goalkeepers. The way the ball enters their hands is improved so that players don’t kick the ball directly to
