I think I understand it intuitively. Intuitively, this says "F is the union of all the subsets of \$A\$", and that's what I understand to mean by a set of subsets. I also think that it's guite straight forward to understand what "subset" means, because you get the idea about it from my intuition. Is that sufficient to understand what a set of subsets means? I have no experience with set theory. I have the following question about one of the examples from my book: Let  $A = {1,2,3}$  and let  $B = { \{1,2,3, \{2,3,\}, \{1,3,\} \} }$ . \$B\$ is a set of subsets of A. Is it not inconsistent that B contains the singleton sets  $\{1\}$ ,  $\{2\}$ ,  $\{3\}$ and  $\{1,2\}, \{2,3\}, \{1,3\}$ , since \$B\$ doesn't contain the singleton set  $\{1,\}$  and it only contains the sets that contain \$\{1,2\\\$. Am I misunderstanding the definition of a set of subsets? Thanks in advance. A: \$F\$ is a set of subsets of a set \$A\$. That's not correct. What it means is that \$F\$ is a set. So in some sense the sets in \$F\$ are subsets of the set \$A\$ that can be in \$F\$. It is equivalent to being the union of sets in F\$. Let  $A = \{1,2,3\}$ \$ and
