Many of us look forward to a long walk or run in the woods, a brief practice session or an opportunity to interact with others in a sport. What can be better than being fit and strong, sweating and active? Cheryl Pimiento, Psy.D. is a licensed psychologist practicing in Central Texas. Her practice focuses on helping people deal with trauma. She received her Ph.D. in Counseling Psychology from the University of South Florida. She is a lecturer at Austin Community College in Counseling and Psychotherapy. She served as a clinician on a trauma recovery team during her university years. Sports are one of the most powerful and worthwhile ways to participate in life. Below are four health benefits of playing sports. 1) Take time for yourself and you'll be happier with what you do. Vacation time is very important to me and to my family. I like to do things that I enjoy and sometimes that means spending quality time with my children. I enjoy running, swimming, biking, walking and playing golf. These activities help me be a better mom, wife, friend and neighbor. Being active is the key to having a fulfilling life. 2) Let loose, feel free and show your natural abilities

This is hard to measure and so we're coming up with new things to measure the benefits. You feel free and don't focus on how you look. You're active, running around, sweating, demonstrating skills and doing things on a level that's hard for people to see. 3) Become stronger and more capable. It's not always clear to the mind what's working and what's not. I can safely say that if I play sports or run regularly that I'm now healthier, stronger and able to deal with more things. I know I'm better able to take on the challenge of what's coming in my future. 4) You get to learn more than you could ever imagine. Sports teach you how to mentally and physically approach life

var list = fields.Select(x => new { x = new StringTokenizer(x, ",").Next(), Value =
