Three weeks ago, the CDC estimated that there were 100 million cases of COVID-19 in the United States. Most of those cases were mild. Only 20,000 required hospitalization and of those, about 1,000 died. Before the summer, when the weather is hot, millions of people will go out and resume their outdoor activities. Sports team are going to play basketball. The beach will be crowded. People will be packed in their cars on the freeway. And on the subway. Sub-Saharan Africa is highly dominated by men in decision making for the family, although women participate in public affairs. In addition, women are occupied with the tasks of raising children and caring for the home, while their husbands are away. In urban areas, women are more involved in employment than in rural areas. In urban areas, women have begun to push men out of full-time employment. Governments have begun to restrict the role of men in family decision-making and employment, promoting employment by women. In addition, governments have invested in public education to increase the demand for women, such as education for girls and the involvement of women in public affairs.
