Regardless of how your wireless network is encrypted, the tool you use to recover the key will be the same. If your network has been configured with WPA, then Wpa Wttester is a great tool to use. Wpa Wttester provides a GUI to decrypt keys and decrypt traffic. Additionally, Wpa Wttester can search through packets for a given password to automatically recover that password. I've never used the setting called "new IP", but the Wi-Fi icon in the top right corner of the iPhone's display will show any available Wi-Fi networks. When you're standing by the Wi-Fi router, you can change the channel by swiping left or right on the icon to switch from channel 1 to channel 11. You can also navigate through all the available channels with the button labeled "All Channels". Every time we connect to a new wireless network, the 4F button will flash to show that we are now connected to the network. You can turn off this automatic connection by tapping the 4F button and selecting the "Off" menu option. You can also enable or disable the devices 802.11b / g/n connection from Settings > Wi-Fi > Wi-Fi Options. These options are also available to enable or disable 802.11b/g/n/ac. A simple way to use your iPhone as a wireless router is to connect it to your router's internet connection first, then connect it to your wireless network at home. It's a simple way to test your wireless network at home without being required to have a WAP. Or, if you have an iPad, iPhone, or iPod Touch, you can use I used WPA/WPA2 and WEP, for testing purposes, to connect to his cell phone and then use an external USB Wi-Fi dongle. If you do that, the iPhone is connected to the WAP using an iPhone-set-up-as-WAP trick.
