It was never easy to make a band with three artists who also happen to be sisters, but the Pointer Sisters worked out pretty well. From their start at the landmark Greenwich Village coffeehouse The Cafe Wha?, the multitasking that would define the sisters' career has been built into the DNA of the band. In 1978, the Nolans invited founding drummer Rita Coolidge and vocalist and guitarist Dawn Silva to join her own group, The Coasters. When the rock world took notice of what the women were up to, they recruited lead singer and percussionist Merry Clayton, and the rest is the history of an inimitable foursome. By 1986, they'd released a string of Top 10 pop hits, winning a Grammy for Best R&B Song, and were at last ready to do it themselves. This album, titled One Heart at a Time, is, after all, a pop record, and their signature blend of funk and pop flourished to the fullest on The Pointer Sisters. If Dawn and Merry were the backbone of the band, the Nolans' signature songwriting techniques inform every release, and the sisters' closeness as performers and characters is palpable on every level. If you go, get their first hit single I'm So Excited, and see if you can leave wondering what the sisters would sound like today. This version of the Pointers, as they're called, rarely plays on the road; they're a studio band, and they work their craft in the recording studio as well as live. Mitch Keach Frontwoman Mallorie Micks first made waves in the mid-1990s with New York indie band the Rapture, then went solo a few years later. She shifted from guitar-wielding alternative rockers to synth-driven pop, and her subsequent albums – Supermoms, Devotion, and Oblivion – still remain incongruous. She and guitarist Natalie Paris have always had a seamless creative synergy and, as dual voices and role models for queer women, their touchstone project is feminism. The combination of The Pointer Sisters pop and Mallorie Micks feminist politics have inspired countless Women and Girls who are rocking out right now. The Pointer Sisters reveal themselves to be a genius of R&B, pop, and folk who deserve to be given a chance to be regular pop music once again.
