After you tap Ctrl + B, Excel will open the Paste Special dialog box so that you can select what you want to copy. You have multiple options, such as creating a new workbook by default or just copying the value. Just remember that if you select pasting a cell value, it will ignore formatting, spacing, etc. You can also copy an entire column, a row, or a whole table. And if you find that you want to consolidate data into one spreadsheet or report, you can do that by selecting multiple cells and using the "Merge and Center" option. The same merge and center option is found in cells as well. After you've copied a cell, you can format it to make it easier to read. In the upper-right corner of a cell, there are five different options (Font, Fill, Borders, Number, and Alignment) that show up when you click on the formatting bar. Changing the font, fill, or number format will alter the cell data. If you'd like to change the number format, you can just drag the formatting bar to the left or right. Leaving the fill and font untouched will leave the cell blank. Adobe Photoshop has a fairly new feature called Document Locator which allows you to find a certain file in a nested folder in the system.
